THE various ordinances of the Long Parliament after its rupture with the King were all, or nearly all, of them printed as separate pamphlets or broadsides.

The more important of these before the 13th March, 1643, were collected and printed in a 4to. volume of 954 pages entitled "An Exact Collection of all Remonstrances, Declarations, Votes, Orders, Ordinances, Proclamations, Petitions, Messages, Answers, and other Remarkable Passages between the King's most Excellent Majesty, and his High Court of Parliament. London, Printed for Edward Husbonds, T. Warren, R. Best, and are to be sold at the Middle Temple, Grays Inne Gate, and the White Horse in Pauls Churchyard, 1643."

This was followed by a folio volume of 943 pages and 24 pages of appendix, entitled "A Collection of all the publicke Orders, Ordinances and Declarations of both Houses of Parliament, from the Ninth of March 1642 untill December 1646. Together with severall of His Majesties Proclamations and other Papers Printed at Oxford London. Printed by T. W. for Ed: Husband, Printer to the Honorable House of Commons, And are to be sold at his shop at the signe of the Golden Dragon in Fleetstreet Nere the Temple Gate 1646."

Several smaller collections of similar documents were published during the time covered by these two volumes. In the last year of the reign of the Protector Oliver, they were all superseded, for the practical business purposes of the time, by the appearance of "A Collection of Acts and Ordinances of General Use, made in the Parliament begun and held at Westminster the third day of November, Anno 1640 and since, unto the Adjournment of the Parliament begun and holden the 17th of September, Anno 1656. By Henry Scobell Esq; Clerk of the Parliament. Examined by the Original Records, And now printed by Special Order of Parliament. London, Printed by Henry Hills and John Field, Printers to His Highness the Lord Protector. 1658." The three collections contain a vast amount of information bearing on the history of the disturbed time to which they relate, but their indexes are almost useless, and consequently they have been of but little service to historians. It is much to be wished that a complete collection of the Ordinances and Acts of Parliament issued between the beginning of the Civil War and the Restoration should be printed for the use of historical students. Though no part of the Statutes of the realm, these treasonable papers have far more living interest than the Acts of many Parliaments whose doings have been strictly legal. If, however, there be no hope of our ever possessing so useful a compilation, it would be well if an index were given of the three volumes above mentioned, in one alphabet.

The Confiscation Acts here reprinted are taken from the work of Scobell, and have been copied entire, except that the notes in the margins of the pages, which contain no information beyond what is given in the text, have been left out as useless.

The proceedings against the Royalists during the Civil War, the Commonwealth, and the Protectorate, are very voluminous and intricate. Until the details of those days are more carefully arranged than at present, it will be impossible to give a full and clear account of what took place.

The first proceedings against the supporters of the King's party noticed in the Journals of the House of Commons seems to be the Ordinance of the 15th March, 1643, for sequestering the estates of papists, bishops, delinquents, and notorious malignants. The notices in the Index to the Journals of the House of Commons of proceedings against delinquents occupy more than six closely printed folio pages.

At first the Royalists were admitted to compound for their estates—that is, they were heavily fined, in what seemed to the men in power a just proportion to their political offences, but as time went on, and feelings became more bitter and passions more fierce, the fines were made heavier. It is probable that the extreme measure of confiscation was not carried out against any (except very prominent people) who had been engaged in the war before the surrender of the King to the Scotch, but who had afterwards abstained from any demonstration against the ruling powers and held aloof from actively sharing in the troubles that followed. It is evident that these persons were regarded in a different light from those men who afterwards took part in the insurrections in Kent and Essex, the men who were concerned in the Pontefract Castle adventure and the raid into the Isle of Axholme, or those who fought at Preston and Worcester. These latter were looked on as rebels, and it was felt that their struggle for the purpose of overturning the government had been so highly dangerous, in spite of its failure, that it was needful for the welfare of the State that they should not for the future find means of mischief ready to their hands. It is scarcely possible to say how far the authorities were guided by the motive of preserving the Commonwealth from constant warfare within herself, and how far they were moved by the desire of obtaining money for the Navy, payment of the long-standing arrears of the Army, and other State expenses, without incurring the odium of still heavier taxation. The latter motive has been attributed to them not only by the Royalist writers, but by others whose feelings have been strongly on the winning side.

I believe these severe Confiscation Acts were passed mainly as a protection against civil war, but certainly they must also be regarded as measures by which the urgent need for money was to be satisfied without taxing too oppressively those who were loyal to the government of the Parliament. We have not now before us, and possibly may never have, sufficient means for judging in what degree each of these two motives influenced the men in power. Probably they scarcely knew themselves; some may have looked merely for the complete suppression of revolt, others may have seen that this was impossible unless their own friends were relieved from the heavy burdens that necessity would lay on them, if other means were not found for paying the public debts.

A few words must be said as to the form in which many of the names appear. At first it had been intended to put what is commonly held to be the correct spelling of the names in the text, within square brackets, and in one or two cases this has been done, but to carry out this plan would be impossible without an amount of labour and consequent delay which would be out of all proportion to the good to be gained. The spelling of surnames, and sometimes of the names of places, was very irregular, it is still arbitrary in a high degree, and families come of the same stock at the present time often spell their names after a different fashion. To have undertaken to ascertain the manner in which the clerks who draughted these Acts should have spelt the names of the Parliament's victims would not only have entailed almost endless research among records and county and family histories, but would also have required the settlement of the question how the possessors of these names should have spelt them, for so little was uniformity of spelling regarded in former times that it is no uncommon thing to find one man signing his name in three or four forms. This habit—it can hardly have been the result of carelessness alone—was of an earlier date, and continued some time after the Civil War. In the will of my own collateral ancestor, John Peacock, of Epworth, in the Isle of Axholme, which was executed in 1542, his surname is spelt six different ways; and Denis Grenville, Dean of Durham from 1684 to 1691, much of whose correspondence has been published by the Surtees Society, spelt his surname in four various fashions, and it occurs in a fifth form in Le Neve's Fasti Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ (ed. 1854, vol. iii. p. 300). It will also have been observed that the publisher of the two volumes of Parliamentary Ordinances calls himself Husbands on the title of the first volume and Husband on that of the second. Men may have thought it looked picturesque to vary the letters of their names, but in the case of place-names the differences must frequently be attributed to the ignorance of the writer, for they are often further from the true sound of the word than would be possible if it had been familiar to the ear.

It may be of use to some persons to know that the Royalist Composition papers in Her Majesty's Public Record Office contain accounts as to the real estates of a great number, probably of all the persons whose names occur in the following lists.

These Royalist Composition papers consist of a large series of documents relating to the fines levied on estates, and the confiscations during the Civil War period and the Commonwealth. They often contain minute particulars as to the lands and estates of the sufferers, which are of incalculable value to persons engaged in the study of local history and genealogy. There is a most excellent Manuscript Index to them preserved in the Literary Search Room. I believe that an analysis of the whole of these papers will be published in forthcoming volumes of the Calendars of Domestic State Papers.¹

In 1655 Thomas Dring, a London bookseller, published "at the signe of the George in Fleet-street near Cliffords Inne"—
"A Catalogue of the Lords, Knights and Gentlemen who have compounded for their estates." There is reason for believing that this is very imperfect even as a mere name list. It is, moreover, one of the most inaccurately printed books in the English language. It is probably an impression of a very rough list, prepared by some Government clerk of the period, which had strayed from proper custody. It seems hardly possible that the strange blunders it contains can all be mere printers' errors. They may be best accounted for on the supposition that the original 'copy' had never been prepared for the press, and that the manuscript was so carelessly written that the printer could not read many portions of it. This almost worthless book was reprinted at Chester in 1733, and this edition is said to contain some names not found in the earlier one.
